MADE IN CANADA

Tomorrow, Canadians in all walks of life will bow their heads in mourning, as their beloved King is laid to rest.

King George VI gave unselfishly and unsparingly in the discharge of his royal duties. He was steadfast through the turbulence of the Second Great War, the uneasy aftermath of austerity and uncertain peace. He set an example that won the loyalty and hearts, the respect and admiration, of his subjects and the world.

His devotion to duty in good health and bad, his gentle and unassuming character, and the quiet simplicity of his family life, are qualities which will long be remembered.

With reverence we salute the memory of a beloved King and a great man.

Britons Pay Last Respects To Dead King

Throngs Of Mourners Witness Monarch Lying In State

By ANDREW SHADDON
From The Herald's London Bureau

LONDON — First came three women, black-veiled and figures shrouded before the face of a loved British husband and son. Then came the peers of the realm, the King's ministers and representatives of great states. And today in the throne room came the silent crowds of the people of Britain.

Under the vaulted roof of Westminster Hall with its dark Saxon and Flemish oak, hammer beams atop the gray walls, like a purple island in the vast space of the hall, was the catafalque, on which rested the fluted coffin of King George VI. At the far end of the hall, beneath a Gothic stained glass window were, for the first time since last occasion, the flags of all the Commonwealth countries.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK in his blue and gold vestments led the assembly in prayer and the voices of two choirs like a muted organ in the great space sang "Able With Me." Then, the simple service ended. Queen Elizabeth led the solemn procession out from the hall to the courtyard. The muffled bells of Westminster Abbey tolled softly as the daylight faded from the gray afternoon skies.

Just before 7 o'clock the lords and ladies, the members of the "faithful commonwealth" and the diplomats, the "official" mourners gathered to pay their respects. But even the "unofficial" mourners were gathering outside the historic walls of Westminster. An old soldier, an ex-soldier, a man and wife from Hirkenshead, from London, from Bournemouth.

A pale moon lighted the frosty evening, and the historic Thames River, broadened its silver way through London. The windows of Westminster were lit from the inside by the yellow flickering flame of candles and the pale light of a few electric chandeliers suspended from the dark ceilings.

SLOWLY, down a broad staircase came the procession of lords, statesmen, soldiers and diplomats. They filed by, on either side of the catafalque. At each of its four corners were the high candlesticks from the tomb of the Unknown Warrior at Westminster Abbey. Like a sculpture rather than a living scene in the dim light were the guard. At floor level were four of the King's bodyguard. Yeomen of the Guard, their purlieus reversed. A step higher were two black-stalked, plum-helmeted members of the Honourable Corps of Gentlemen at Arms and at the corners of the coffin four officers of the Household Troops in their dress uniforms with their swords drawn, vesting point downward and under their folded hands, and with their heads bowed.

The coffin was draped with the Royal Standard and on it rested the Imperial crown, the sceptre, the orb and the state sword, symbols of the monarchy which goes on. Standing out from them was a single wreath from the Queen Mother in the memory of "Bertie"—the man at whose side she had stood so long.

LONG BEFORE the sun came out the crowds began to arrive on the public transportation and in their small cars. Four at a time they formed up and slowly walked into the hall, down the wide staircases and past the catafalque, and thick gray carpets absorbed their steps and the only sound was the occasional clinking of spurs as the guard of officers was changed.

The people on their way to work in the city had come earlier than usual to make their pilgrimage to Westminster, men in the work clothes of manual labor, men in the dark suits and the bowler hats of the financial houses. Girls from the streets and officers, men in the uniforms of many nations.

Later housewives came with their shopping bags over their arms and women in fur coats blighting from chauffeur driven limousines, a gray haired woman, shivering slightly in the cold, who said uncertainly and rather sadly "I have lived in five reigns; I guess I shan't see another," and a schoolboy, young in the procession of life and only dimly aware of the significance of a morning he will never forget.

It was estimated some 40,000 Britons had filed recently through the hall by mid-afternoon today. A queue of 30,000 stretched alongside the Thames hoping to gain admittance before the doors closed for the night at 10 p.m.

They Received A Rousing Western Welcome

Many Calgarians Remember Visit Of King And Queen Here In 1939

Calgarians and thousands of visitors from Southern Alberta gave a rousing western welcome to King George VI and Queen Elizabeth when they arrived in the city at 3 p.m. on Friday, May 26, 1939, during the royal tour of Canada.

The roar of cannon from Mesata Park was the first hint of the approach of the royal train. The odd of pipes could be heard on 8th Ave. as the pipes played the national anthem when the King and Queen got off the train.

Thousands were massed in front of the station, along Centre St. and 8th Ave. west to 20th St., 7th Ave. to 20th St. in the city hall. Troops made rapid movements as a continuous guard was available for the downtown parade route.

AFTER TRAVELING the centre of town, their majesties were greeted at the city hall by the three Mayor Andrew Dawson, who presented them with an illuminated address of welcome.

Clad in a uniform of an admiral of the fleet, the King inspected the honor guard, which was divided into two sections; the Calgary Highlanders and a composite group made up of officers and other ranks of the permanent and non-permanent R.C.A.F.

Heading the H-acc procession through town was the pilot car with Commissioner S. T. Wood as the R.C.M.P. Police Chief Col. David Ritchie, M.C., and Chief Constable A. Campbell of Scotland Yard.

AS THE POLICE car drew clear of the station, half of the Lord Strathcona's Hussars swept along in front of the car bearing the royal couple. Seated in the car beside the driver was a police official, while the rear seat was occupied by the King and Queen, Col. Hon. Peter Litch, equerry-in-waiting to his majesty.

The remainder of the L.S.M.I. mounted escort closed in behind the royal car. In the next car were Lady Noun-Orborne, lady-in-waiting to the Queen, and the Earl of Artille, lord chamberlain to the Queen. This car was followed by another bearing His Hon. W. Mackenzie King, then prime minister, Mayor and Mrs. Dawson, and A. D. P. Henry, principal secretary to the prime minister.

Immediately behind this car came another in which Hon. J. A. Mackintosh, Alberta member in the federal cabinet, Mrs. Mackintosh, and Lady Katherine Seymour, lady-in-waiting to the Queen, were passengers.

THE THRONGS on 8th Ave. W. were comparatively silent until this moment. They had heard the drum salute and the cheers at the station. A vast sea of faces, five blocks long, watched for the first sight of the royal procession. All at once the secret tundra and hills for the Queen, but the King had visited Nova Scotia before the First Great War as a naval cadet.

housa beliefs of the mounted escort came into view. Suddenly a mighty cheer went up. The cars moved slowly up the avenue between lines of troops standing rigidly. Crowds of citizens and visitors stood in the rear.

Many disabled First Great War veterans saw the procession and cheered, their majesties from the front of Col. Richter hospital, then on 8th Ave.

"As the parade neared Mesata, Alberta, the low, throbbing heart of a hundred drums was heard. Members of the royal party looked puzzled. The King and Queen leaned forward. It was not the roll of military drums but of Indian tom-toms.

NEXT WAS HEARD the shrill chant of welcome sung by the Blackfoot Confederacy as they greeted their Great White Father and Mother from Across the Big Water. Long lines of Indian chiefs, clad in their finest beaded, ornamented with war bonnets, shook their war lances and shouted a deep-throated welcome to their king.

The Hon. G. Peigan, Stevens and Skerrett joined in the impulsive native welcome.

Thirty-twelve leapers formed the background for the scene. Most were the historic dancers in Indian robes, of great stoles of the tribes. Inspector of Indian Agencies C. P. Schmidt introduced the chief C. P. Schmidt introduced the head chiefs to the royal party.

Very Little Dog, tribal interpreter, in his dress of medicine man, called each headman's name in his native tongue and then interpreted for the King.

Smiling happily at the chance to be among the native people of the plains, their majesties received each with courtesy.

WHEN THE procession continued, it met with some of the largest crowds of the day, around the city hall. As the King alighted from his car, the national anthem was played by the band of the Calgary Regiment (Tank).

The mayor read the welcome address as the huge crowd thronged around the building. This was the high point of the city's welcome to their majesties.

Early in the evening the royal party left by the train for Banff. The next day, the King enjoyed a climb of Tunnel Mountain.

This was the first visit to Can-

Tribute Presented George VI

At a memorial service conducted Friday morning in First Church of Christ, Scientist, Calgary, and in other Christian Science churches throughout the Empire, a tribute to King George VI from the board of directors of the Mother Church, in Boston, Massachusetts, was presented.

The reader, Jack Chasle, presented the following: "KING GEORGE VI of Great Britain, Northern Ireland and the British Dominions Beyond the Seas, has passed away, greatly beloved and deeply lamented. "The love he inspired lives in the heart of millions. He was not only the people's ruler, but in thought and deed their affectionate friend. In his last, a greatest hour of trial he and his queen, Elizabeth, moved among their subjects, sharing their sufferings and encouraging them by their heroic example.

"HIS DEEP and affectionate nature was expressed in an ideal family life. His only ambition was to serve God and to help his people. They will keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee; because he trusteth in Thee" (Isaiah 26:3).

"THE NEW sovereign, Queen Elizabeth II, who has now succeeded her father, has already established herself in the affections of her subjects, whose loyalty will be a most support in the days ahead.

"The love of every Christian Scientist goes out to the Royal Family and to the whole British people. We are mindful of the words of our beloved leader, Mary Baker Eddy, (Pulpit Book Press, Page 45, 'Who lives in good lives also in God, lives in all life, through all space.' He is an indivisible kingdom, but diadems a crown of crosses. His existence is deathless, forever unfolding its eternal principle."

British Churches Crowded With Mourners

Millions Gather
To Pay Homage
To The King

By ANDREW SNADDON
(From The Herald's London Bureau
(Copyright Herald Company Limited))

LONDON — In small village churches and in great cathedrals of England Sunday millions paid homage to King George, whose body was brought to London today to be in state in aged Westminster Hall.

Saturday night it was announced that there would be a period of court mourning ending May 31 and it is considered most likely that the coronation of Elizabeth will take place sometime this summer. Previously in this century it has never been possible, for a variety of reasons, to have the coronation in the same year as the accession, but court sources say that there is no reason in tradition that it should not be so.

COURT MOURNING periods have generally lasted up to a year, but the four months period of mourning for King George is considered to be more in keeping with modern times. The coronation is said to have been given little consideration as yet and might not be held until next year but general opinion is that it will be around September of this year.

Of all the church services held throughout the world Sunday, the most touching was in the tiny church of St. Mary Magdalene at Sandringham early in the morning. The Queen, Queen mother and other members of the royal family attended a brief, private service conducted by the vicar of the church the King knew so well. While the nation's grief and sympathy were sincere and heartfelt it was the family's only chance for prayers together to the husband and father of a family which in spite of the demands of state responsibility has remained an inspiring group.

WHILE SNOWFLAKES fell on the Norfolk countryside, they melted in the family pew where only a week before the King himself had sat with them at an ordinary Sunday service.

Outside the church the men, women and children of the Sandringham royal estate, who had known the king as a beloved squire, walked slowly through the falling snow to the neighbouring churches, to take part in their own simple services.

Saturday, in contrast to the elaborate lying in state ceremonies which will take place in Westminster Hall this week, the people of the royal estate silently filed through the estate church past the King's coffin.

In small groups they came when it was possible for them to leave their duties. The general public was not admitted for it was the time when the workers who knew him in the informal moments on the royal estate which he loved so well.

THE GUARD OF HONOR was not representative of the military splendor of empire but, at the four corners of the coffin biers bowed were simply-dressed workers and other men who worked on the estate.

On the coffin were only a few wreaths—those of the immediate family. In the greater magnificence of state solemnities the scene at Sandringham was the simpler picture of a family man's farewell from his own and the ordinary folk—those who knew him intimately as "papa" and "The Squire".

THIS MORNING from the church a sad procession moved along the two and one half mile route to the Tudor style station at Wootton where the coffin was placed on board a special train for London.

At one point, up a steep hill the road passes in view of the sea the sailor King knew so well.

Along the route were the farmers, villagers, estate workers and country folk who had often in the past gathered to bid the King welcome in the peace and informality of Sandringham.

THIS IS A PHOTO OF ST. GEORGE'S WINDSOR CASTLE where King George VI and members of the royal family spent much of their time. His body will be buried in the royal vault in the adjoining St. George's chapel. The castle stands atop a hill on the banks of the Thames River in the County of Berkshire, 21 miles west of London. Mourners filed past the bier of the King in Westminster Hall at the rate of from 4,000 to 2,000 an hour prior to his funeral. Along the closed coffin are the wreath of Queen Mother Elizabeth, the Imperial Crown and the Cross of Westminster. Mourners pass on both sides and leave the great hall through the door in the background.

Canadians Pay Silent Homage To Memory Of Beloved Sovereign

OTTAWA, Feb. 15 (CP)—Canada paid silent, solemn homage Friday to the memory of its late, beloved King—George VI.

The spire of a two-minute silence fell across the land as capital, city and hamlet held quiet memorial services for the sovereign. The day was one of general mourning throughout Canada.

Schools generally were closed. Banks were shut. Other business places were closed either for all or part of the day. Theatres remained closed in most places until evening.

The always, too, questioned the C.R.C., except for broadcasts of the funeral services in Britain and the memorial service in Canada, was silent. Private stations were not required to leave the air, but generally programmed only solemn music.

OTTAWA LEADS NATION
Ottawa, the capital, led the nation in its last tribute to the King with a solemn ceremony in the grey-stoned Hall of Fame in the parliament buildings.

There, before a draped, purple velvet curtain at one end of the hall, leaders of state placed wreaths. Outside, before the buildings, a great crowd stood huddled as the two-minute silence was observed and cannon began firing 34 rounds in a salute to the departed monarch.

The Parliament Hill ceremony started with the tolling of the 1,100-pound Great Bell of the station high in the Peace Tower that rises above the parliament buildings. It tolled for 34 minutes—once each 30 seconds—to mark the 34 years of the King's life.

The crowds—estimated at 3,000 persons—gathered early in the morning behind the lines of servicemen stationed before the main building of parliament.

Inside, a 100-man guard of honor, representative of the three armed services, lined the Hall of Fame. Diplomats, cabinet ministers, members of parliament and other officials stood silently in reserved areas along the hall.

At 2:35 p.m., massed bands stationed in a nearby committee room played Chopin's Funeral March, "Aldie With Me," "God Save the Queen" and "O Canada."

SILENT PERIOD
The hall, silent, marked the two-minute silence, marked by the firing of a single gun, began at 2:38 p.m. It ended at 2:40 p.m. with the first of the 34-gun salute.

High-ranking officials placed wreaths, five in all, before the velvet curtain, which was flanked by officer representatives of the Navy, Army, Air Force and R.C.M.P. Each stood with head bowed, his rifle reversed.

The first wreath was placed by Chief Justice Thibault's Minister. He was accompanied by Prime Minister St. Laurent.

The wreath, from the people of Canada, bore a card with these words:

"Canada mourns a great King and a good man. Senator Elie Beauregard, Speaker of the Senate, placed a wreath and was accompanied by Hon. W. J. Robertson, Government leader in the Senate. The third was placed by Speaker Ross Macdonald of the Commons, accompanied by Mr. St. Laurent and George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader.

PLAY LAMENT
During the placing of the wreaths, a pipe band of the Cameron Highlanders of Ottawa played a Highland lament.

The ceremony ended with a flourish of trumpets and the playing of God Save the Queen.

It was a public holiday throughout British Columbia, with schools, stores and other business places closed. Lieutenant-Governor Clarence Wallace and other official representatives attended services in Vancouver's Christ Church Cathedral. In the afternoon, the armed forces, participated in cenotaph services in downtown Vancouver.

The silence spread across the prairies. Manitoba proclaimed a day of mourning. Schools and the larger business establishments were closed. A non-religious, all-musical program took place in Winnipeg's civic auditorium in the afternoon.

In Saskatchewan, businesses remained shut and churches held memorial services.

At Regina, the provincial memorial service was conducted at 11 a.m. in the armory, with a two-minute silence. Lieutenant-Governor W. J.

305,806 Persons Filled Past King

LONDON, Feb. 15 (CP)—Three days of public homage for the King ended at Big Ben high in the tower above noon 6 a.m.

A total of 305,806 persons had filed by the body while it lay in Westminster Hall.

Sixteen years ago 408,183 filed past the heir of the King's father George V. But that lying-in-state was held around the clock for just full days.

Palmerston, Premier T. C. Douglas, Mayor Gordon Grant of Regina and other officials attended.

An artillery salute of 34 guns, sounded at 30-second intervals, was fired from the banks of the Wascana River.

In Alberta, memorial services took place in churches throughout the province.

In Quebec and the Maritime provinces memorial services were held and schools closed.

Citizens Of Alberta Hold Memorial Rites

EDMONTON, Feb. 15 (CP)—Nearly 4,000 persons including Premier Manning Friday attended an inter-denominational memorial service for King George VI at Edmonton Gardens.

Premier Manning said that "perhaps never before in the history of man has the passing of a King brought such sorrow and personal loss to the hearts and lives of so many people."

Mayor Havensack said many have called the late King a "good man and that is the highest tribute any man can receive."

The main address was by Rev. E. J. Thompson, Dean of St. Stephen's College.

Mr. Thompson said the late King was great because he was good and good because he was great. Guided by a deep and profound faith, the King had devoted his life to the service of God and his fellow men.

No greater memorial could be made for the King than to live as he did.

There were many other services in addition to the mass meeting at Edmonton Gardens.

The Anglican and Roman Catholic churches held separate services. At the Anglican service, Most Rev. W. F. Barfoot, Archbishop of Edmonton and Primate of All Canada, conducted the service in All Saints' Cathedral.

In St. Joseph's Cathedral, Roman Catholics attended a special service highlighted by celebration of a pontifical high mass by Archbishop J. H. MacDonald.

About 1,400 members of the active and reserve forces of both the Army and the R.C.A.F. took part in a parade at the Legislative Buildings. This ceremony was marked by a 34-gun salute to the late King.

Other Edmonton services included a Navy parade and ceremonies at the Mohammed Mosque, by public school students and at the University of Alberta.

In many southern Alberta communities church bells were tolled 34 times to mark the King's age at his death.

In Lethbridge hundreds were turned away from a mass civic ceremony attended by at least 2,000 persons in the Collegiate Institute gymnasium.

Prior to the mass civic ceremony in the Lethbridge Collegiate Institute a brief, solemn service was held at the city cemetery where deputy mayor A. W. Shackleton placed a solitary wreath.

Many Lethbridge churches held special mourning services, including high masses at the Anglican and Roman Catholic churches.

Throughout southern Alberta, special church services were attended by thousands in nearly every community. Three or four of the largest towns held mass civic ceremonies.

Recovers For Service

WINDSOR, England, Feb. 15 (AP)—Dr. Geoffrey Fisher gives the Church of England's final blessing to the King who made him the youngest Archbishop of Canterbury of modern times.

Dr. Fisher, now 61, was 57 when the King appointed him Archbishop and Primate of all England. In that same year he visited Canada. He has a rich baritone voice that can echo round St. Paul's Cathedral.

Dr. Fisher never was a parish priest. His administrative ability as headmaster for 15 years of the exclusive Repton public school for boys led him straight to the Bishopric of Chester for six years, then in 1938 to London, whose people he ministered throughout the war.

The archbishop recovered from influenza just in time to officiate at the mournful occasion.

Late at the coronation will come a supreme moment for him—when he places the Crown on the head of Queen Elizabeth.

TAB-TAXI DRIVERS
MONTREAL (CP)—An average of 500 tax drivers here are being photographed every day as pictures are being obtained of the 11,000 taxi drivers in Greater Montreal. With the assistance of New Services on May 1, taxicabs must carry a photograph of the driver with his license.

Half World's People Dropped Tasks Friday

TORONTO, Feb. 15 (CP)—More than half the world's people dropped their tasks for a few moments Friday to pay silent homage to the memory of King George VI on his funeral day.

As Londoners sat huddled on cold sidewalks at midnight waiting for the funeral procession to begin, Australians and New Zealanders were already streaming through streets bathed in mid-summer sunshine to attend memorial services.

The tributes followed the sun around the earth from east to west, embracing people of all races, colors and political creeds.

On the battle front in Korea, Commonwealth guns were silenced and men climbed out of frozen foxholes to stand, with heads bowed, for two minutes' silence.

In the jungles of Malaya, wherever possible, anti-heads fighters halted in their tracks, guns at the ready, to remember their King.

British officials in strife-riddled Egypt staged that Egyptian terrorists took advantage of British troops' attendance of a memorial service to blow up a military train.

Dispatches told how the people of the world—both the great and humble—paid their last respects to his memory.

United States: President Truman led official Washington in a special commemorative service arranged by the Bishop of Washington, Dr. Angus Dun, in Washington cathedral. British Ambassador Sir Oliver Franks read the lesson, and prayers were offered for the King, the Queen, and the royal family. Other cities held similar services.

New Zealand: Clergy and guns summoned people to observe a two-minute silence. Thousands listened to religious broadcasts of the funeral ceremonies.

Australia: Everything came to a halt at noon throughout the vast, sun-baked continent. In Melbourne's vast exhibition building, thousands gathered to hear Premier Robert Menzies and other leaders in a special memorial service.

Hong Kong: Humble Chinese fishing folk rubbed shoulders with dignitaries at memorial services.

Singapore: Two weeks of court mourning has been ordered by all nine rulers in the Malayan Federation.

In all other British possessions the same pattern followed. Memorial services, periods of silence and a general slow-down or halt of business took place.

Egyptian Wreath Most Elaborate

Floral Tributes To King Numbered In Thousands

(Compiled from C.P. and A.P. Dispatches)

Florists disclosed today that one of the most elaborate of an estimated 100,000 floral tributes ordered for Friday's funeral of the King has come from Egypt's King Farouk, whose country is involved in a bitter quarrel with Britain.

The wreath includes hundreds of curled laurel leaves—

It took two women 12 hours to curl them—and white lilies. The white silk ribbon attached is inscribed "King Farouk of Egypt and the Sudan."

OTHER FIGURES embroiled in controversy with the late King's government also sent wreaths. Florists, swamped with work, hired hundreds of extra workers.

Among those who ordered wreaths was Egyptian Prime Minister Aly Maher Pasha, appointed by Farouk to quiet Egyptian riots which marked the country's dispute with Britain.

Another was Prime Minister Mohammed Mossadegh and his Iranian government, who still are in dispute with Britain over the British oil properties Iran nationalized last spring.

THE KING AND QUEEN of Sweden sent a laurel wreath with a blue and yellow crepe band decorated with the Swedish royal monogram. The Swedish navy ordered a six-foot floral anchor bound in golden crepe.

Three plantloads of flowers were flown in by the French Riviera resort cities of Nice, Antibes and Cannes to decorate St. George's Chapel at Windsor Castle, where the King will be buried. White lilies were flown from The Netherlands and plantloads of mimosas from Southern France.

FIVE WREATHS will be placed at the national war memorial in Ottawa during the national ceremony of mourning for the King. The state department, issuing details of the ceremony Tuesday, said also that it will take place at 12:45 p.m. M.S.T. and that the Canadian Legion and 12 other veterans' organizations will be represented.

The wreaths will be placed by Chief Justice Thibault, administrator of Canada in the absence of a governor-general; Senator Elie Beauséjour, Speaker of the Senate; Speaker W. Ross Macdonald of the Commons; Field Marshal Lord Alexander, on behalf of the Canadian Legion; and Mayor Charlotte Whitton of Ottawa.

CANADA will observe the same period of official mourning as the United Kingdom—to Saturday, May 31—officials said today.

They explained that Queen Elizabeth's decision that the London court go into mourning for that period applies as well to all of the courts of her realm, including Rideau Hall, the residence of Canada's governor-general.

It means that the Canadian government will hold no social or state functions until June 1, when the court goes out of mourning.

From Amsterdam it was reported the official visit of Queen Juliana of The Netherlands to Ottawa, scheduled for April, has been wartime service in the Auxiliary Territorial Service, and personal association with individual regiments have "given me some experience of the varied and onerous tasks which they are called upon to discharge."

The Queen praised the heroic exploits of the R.A.F. during the war and expressed confidence its men "will continue to display that pride of service and unswerving allegiance to the crown which they have ever shown."

QUEEN ELIZABETH II conducted her first official ceremony at Buckingham Palace today, receiving Prime Minister Winston Churchill in a state audience.

Accompanied by 20 members of the House of Commons, Mr. Churchill presented an address to the Queen and received a formal reply, court attaches said. The texts of their remarks were not announced.

Among others from Parliament who participated in the brief ceremony were Clement Attlee, former prime minister, and Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden.

A MEMORIAL and benediction service for the King was held at Tokyo's St. Ignace Church today with members of the Canadian Roman Catholic colony in Tokyo attending.

Present were Arthur Menzies, chief of the Canadian diplomatic mission and apostolic delegate Archbishop Maximilien de Furstberg, Rev. Michael Dwyer of Toronto's Scarborough Foreign Mission Society, officiated, with the mission choir under Rev. Michael Cox.

Lieutenant-Governor J. J. Bowen of Alberta has received a message from Queen Elizabeth II in which the Queen expresses her gratitude for "the message which you have sent me on behalf of the government and people of Alberta."

Mr. Bowen sent a telegram last week expressing the sorrow of the people of Alberta at the death of King George VI.

GEN. H. D. O. CREER, Canada's wartime army commander, will attend funeral services for the King in London and Windsor Friday as one of his majesty's aide-de-camp generals.

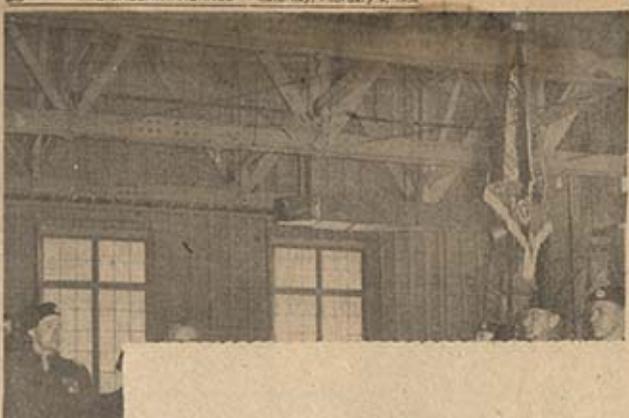

Gen. Creer will fly to England with Defence Minister Claxton, leaving Ottawa today at 3 p.m. M.S.T., aboard the R.C.A.F.'s CS aircraft.

The general is one of five army aide-de-camp generals to the late King. The other four all are from the United Kingdom forces.

T. L. WILSON, president of the Ontario Provincial Dailies Association, said Thursday all member newspapers will publish Friday, the day of the King's funeral, Newswatch, off-sets will observe

A LONE BOBBY and a few mourners are seen standing at the gates of Sandringham, the royal country home, where King George VI died Wednesday peacefully in his sleep. It is here that Queen Elizabeth II paid her final private tribute to her father, following her hurried arrival home from South Africa.

Glory And Splendor Marked Funeral Procession

LONDON, Feb. 15 (AP)—From the Palace of Westminster to the Castle of Windsor, the funeral procession of the King wound its stately way.

Past majestic palaces and historic courts and through 14 royal boroughs the pompous showed the glory and splendor of British history and tradition united in mourning for a beloved King.

The vanguard of the millions who had gathered through a dark and snowy night, wrapping themselves in blankets and drinking tea brewed over bonfires in the city streets.

More than 11,000 bobblees crisscrossed the three-mile route through London.

As dawn broke over the Thames and bathed the Tower of Westminster in a grey-obsidian haze, the crowds peered around New Palace from the shore of the river, the procession formed. There, at 1:30 a.m. units began to gather.

At 1:45 a.m. the Earl Marshal, slowest in the Duke of Norfolk, wearing a black frock coat with wide red collar and the Peace Tower—our snow-dusted swatches of black and purple hunting over the doorways are only the symbols of national mourning. Its real measure is the mood of Parliament Hill.

THINGS WHICH on Tuesday still seemed vital and urgent have shrunk, against the yardstick of bereavement, to small proportions.

The politicking preliminary to a session of Parliament less than three weeks away is suddenly invisible. Perhaps the balancing of party manoeuvre and advantage goes on, but it does not ripple Ottawa's solemn surface.

Behind that surface the machinery of government still turns. The decisions, the statements and the statistics which are its product still come out of it. But their import is strangely lessened.

ON THURSDAY the Dominion bureau of statistics released its yearly accounting of Canada's national income and spending. It recorded that Canadians produced more, earned more, invested more, spent more and saved more in 1951 than ever before in their history. At any other time there would have been a fanfare of headlines, explanations and profuse comments.

But in a capital in mourning it meant little more than just words mimeographed on D.B.S.'s blue-headed paper.

Other announcements, important at any other time, have dropped into the same silent void.

ISSUES WHICH WERE being argued bitterly on Tuesday sudcuts and a black rooked hat with long white plumes, took up his position.

At 9:15 a.m. a maroon limousine drove up to the door of Westminster and Queen Mother Elizabeth, the widow, stepped out accompanied by Princess Margaret. The Princess Royal, sister of the dead King, joined them and the three royal ladies went into the hall to say a private farewell to the late King.

The Queen and her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, arrived seconds later and also hurried into Westminster.

As the royal party disappeared, the gun carriage for the King's body was drawn from historic Star Court to the front entrance by 156 sailors pulling on white nylon ropes. The first of the black-and-silver state carriages drew up behind it.

Exactly at 9:30 a.m. the King's casket, draped in the gold-and-scarlet Royal standard, was borne out on the shoulders of eight Guardsmen.

might mean.

The arguments for and against a Canadian governor-general and whether Canada is a Dominion have suddenly been stilled.

THESE THINGS are only the trappings of Canada's monarchy. Against the reality of kingship and queenship, made immediate by the death of a King and the succession of a Queen, the trappings have shrunk to triviality.

Ottawans look at Confederation Square and remember the quiet, alien man who walked there in 1929 in the middle of a crowd of cheering veterans and who is dead; and the young woman who stood there, rather stiffly, before the war memorial only three months ago and is now a Queen.

The city around the square is strangely silent. Its silence is the measure of the grief it feels for the man who is dead and the sympathy it feels for the young woman who has been thrust suddenly into the hard, selfish role of monarchy.

Duplessis Takes Oath From Hospital Bed

MONTREAL (CP)—Premier Maurice Duplessis of Quebec, in a hospital suite here Friday took the oath of allegiance to Queen Elizabeth II.

The premier is under treatment for an injured ankle when he slipped and fell on an icy Montreal sidewalk last week. The oath was administered by Hon. Gaillard Fautoux, lieutenant-governor of Quebec.

Bagpipes wailed. Big Ben began to toll the first of 56 strokes for the King.

As the gun carriage moved off, the Queen Mother, the Princess Royal and Princess Margaret came on and stepped into their carriage.

A single clang from Big Ben heralded the start of the procession, which turned into St. James' Street.

The band of Scots Guards and the massed pipes of the Scottish and Irish Guards came into view. The heart-searing wail of the bagpipes began.

The gun carriage bearing the coffin looked pathetically small amidst all the splendor.

The royal carriages followed close behind. The new Queen sat upright, she seemed quite composed, as if she were reviewing her people—looking round at them, and glancing as she passed below us right up into our window," as one man described it.

Behind, with solemn faces, marched the four Dukes, including one who had been King. The Duke of Windsor walked between Gloucester and Kent in Naval uniform. Edinburgh was on the right.

Queen Mary, mother of the King, did not participate in the procession. Her 84 years kept her at her home, Marlborough House, not far from Westminster. There she watched the procession through field glasses from the only window not shuttered. At the late King's coffin passed, she stood and waved a mother's last farewell.

Behind the Duke came the Earl Mountbatten and three other crowned heads and rulers of British and foreign territories.

The heads of foreign delegations came next, many in diplomatic uniforms. Behind them were the carriages in which rode the King of Norway and Europe's Queen.

At Paddington station the funeral procession arrived 15 minutes ahead of schedule.

ng's health, but the universal acuity of three months ago had been placed to deep gratification what seemed to be a rapid and easy recovery.

"For Canadians, as for all his Majesty's subjects, the death of their sovereign will be a personal sorrow. Our loyal attachment to her crown has been strengthened throughout the King's reign by our universal admiration for his courage and the exemplary family life of King George VI.

"To the people of this country who have never forgotten the visit of the King and Queen in 1939 and their many associations with our armed forces during the war, the King was both a great King and a good man. His passing will be mourned not only in Canada and elsewhere throughout the Commonwealth but everywhere in the free world.

"TO HER MAJESTY Queen Elizabeth, who shared so fully the life and the duties of the King, the sympathy of the Canadian people will go in fullest measure. We also feel deep sympathy for Queen Mary, for Princess Margaret and the other members of the royal family.

"For our new sovereign, Queen Elizabeth II, our sympathy is all the greater because, in this hour of sorrow, she was separated from her father and mother and sister. Her Majesty's recent visit to Canada has given us all the same of her services in us and the feeling that this land, too, is her home.

"With our sympathy, we extend in our new Queen not only an expression of complete loyalty but also of abiding personal affection. It will be the desire of all that Divine Providence will sustain her Majesty in the discharge of her heavy duties.

In Edmonton L.-Gov. J. J. Bowles of Alberta, said she was a just and conscientious man, and his death is a terrible loss which will be felt by everyone."

Funeral For The King Friday; Silent Trek To Bier Continues

Mourning Line A Moving Scene

Herald And London Times Reporters Describe Westminster Hall During Day Of Lying In State

(The moving scene at London's Westminster Hall Wednesday as thousands filed past the King's bier in silent tribute during the second day of the lying in state is described by reporters for the Times-Dispatch special service.)

LONDON—There was a bitter wind with an overcast sky in the early morning, promising more of the snow which had settled lightly in the night, though the threat came to nothing. Hundreds of people were constantly arriving by underground, buses, and trains to join the others waiting outside the hall till by 9 a.m. a queue three and four abreast reached for a mile to and across Lambeth Bridge.

Street traders dressed in black were trying to sell black-bordered descriptions of the "state funeral" but few people stopped even to glance at the sheets. The arrivals stopped somewhat as office hours approached, but the places of the early morning workers were then taken by housewives, postmen, railway workers, some accompanying groups of school children and people from overseas.

Hall Silent Except For Bell Chimes

Soon the queue was stretched along the Albert Embankment on the opposite side of the Thames and those who crossed Westminster bridge reached the tail of it long before others who had hopefully followed it from the square.

By 10:30 a.m. the queue had doubled back on itself at the Albert Embankment and it was estimated that it would take two hours to reach Westminster Hall. At this time police equipped with walk speakers were directing the crowds over Westminster bridge at the ever-changing queue, part of which had been channelled into Victoria Tower Gardens to ease the congestion.

Inside Westminster Hall, in the first few hours, there was hardly any sound except for the starchy chimes of Big Ben. The repeated static comes as the sun glazes the light of candles and the electric candles, and faintly on the air was borne the sound of flowers. From time to time those who were already passing the catafalque were held by a policeman as, with a light click of duty, a military officer of the Household Cavalry filed down the staircase on the west side of the hall opposite the catafalque and went through the ceremony of taking over the watch.

Colorful Uniforms Add To Pageant

Most splendid of all the variations in the still-changing pageant of the lying in state is that in which the Household Cavalry supplies the glaze as its regiments filed for the hours before noon. Then the sections of the most respected in the army, add a touch of glory to the scene with their two color uniforms, complementary but quite distinct. Each uniform is as crisp as the other, but the color of the blue tunic and red breeches shows of the Royal Horse Cavalry long to the Household Cavalry a new note of color that brightens the total effect.

A 21st-century band of duty at the catafalque Wednesday morning brought together at its corners four officers all clad alike in shining helmet and tunic, but two of them in the colors of the Blues, the others in the Life Guards' scarlet with white plumes.

Present in an arch to the left of the people filing past the west altar, stood a 20th officer. He remained at attention on the landing of some double-staircase by which the Household Cavalry comes and goes the officers in a blue and white fairy tale to inform one another at the catafalque. The 20th officer, behind whom there is sometimes a wall, waits there in reserve to take the place of any comrade who over be taken ill and find himself unable to complete his arduous spell of duty.

Most Visitors Wear Black Adornment

The entrance to the House of Commons was often crowded as men, N.P.A. nurses and officials made their way to the entrance in new palace yard. Mothers and boys of Westminster school were in this company. A crippled woman was carried past the catafalque by two ambulance men.

Most women in the pilgrimage were black or had some black adornment and many men wore black ties and armbands. There was always some recognition of the death with every one turning for the catafalque. A young man in a blue and white uniform, the color of the Household Cavalry, was seen to be looking at the catafalque with a look of admiration.

By 12:30 p.m. the main-line queue stretched 2½ miles across the Thames and along its South Bank. Early in the afternoon military policemen were patrolling the closely-packed ranks announcing from time to time on loudspeakers the position of the tail of the queue and that those joining it then would have to wait for at least four hours.

Changing Of Guard Full Of Dignity

Inside the hall as soon the prince and other householders of the Household Cavalry were replaced by the heralds and scullery of the Grenadier Guards. These moments when the watchmen were relieved of their duty. Now and then in all their movements the Grenadier Guards officers bowed from the doorway on the western wall and for a moment the line of movement was arrested so that the soldiers could greet their path.

The silence was intense as the two-file columns moved past, sometimes four abreast as the policemen advanced, without hurrying the people, to speed the flow. The still-silent heads of a party of British and Indian, standing close on one another, were seen to be bowed a slight angle which was greatly magnified. An elderly man slipped on the stone staircase but when carried to his feet, opened his mouth in surprise. The black-robed figure of an Abbey official, standing nearby, was seen to be looking at the motionless guards in their file.

The great southern window became effaced with a weak light during the afternoon and it illuminated the heads of the multitude passing beneath it to enter the hall. But the center of the hall was in shadow except where the candle flames on the brilliant chimes surrounding the catafalque were glimmered on the Gothic Ceiling of Westminster brought from the sanctuary of the Abbey to stand at the head of the coffin.

With Desk Length Of Line Increased

As the light drew away and from into the evening became the numbers of people filing past increased. The desk of those who have visited the grave was long, as the stream opened out beyond the cemetery, many were taken down to other places of entry and for a while the people filed past in a line six or seven deep instead of in a line.

At the time for the changing of the watch the pace of the queue arrested, people stepped out of the line and stood against the walls to watch the slow head of the column as they took up positions and the infinite motions of their movement started gradually. Some were gathering about the black glass of the windows of Westminster Hall on higher steps but took little. However by dawn the lady was well, and the few refugees of 12 previous alterations were cast up to the eighth watching of orders below and the unbroken ranks of the crowd. Here in profound gloom, there in white shade, 200,000 eyes seemed to be caught in light between night and day.

Tribute Period Extended

LONDON (CP)—The Archbishop of Canterbury, Britain's foremost Anglican churchman, bowed in prayer beside the closed coffin of the King today as people by the thousands filed slowly past.

This was the third day of the King's lying-in-state in Westminster Hall. Friday the body will be placed on a gun carriage and taken by train to Windsor, initial place of King.

Archbishop Benson continued to pay their respects in such numbers that police officials decided not to allow the great iron-strapped doors of the semi-circular hall west 8 a.m. Friday.

This is only 2½ hours before the ceremonial service starts at Paddington station, and the dignitaries of the state funeral, originally, it was planned to close the doors at 10 a.m.

Before that hour, it was reported without confirmation that the Duke of Windsor, who arrived from New York Wednesday, asked to be allowed to stand watch at the candle-lit bier so he and his three children, all 10 years ago for their father, King George VI.

As the grieving Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, Archbishop of Canterbury, bowed for a few minutes to those of the purple-draped catafalque and then turned away through the forest of slender trees, police officials put their feet on the final order of the funeral march.

The young queen, her mother, and her sister, Princess Margaret, and the King's sister, the Princess Royal, will ride in a carriage close behind the bier.

THEN ON FOOT and almost will follow the four royal dukes of Windsor, who was once Edward VIII; Gloucester, the King's other living brother; Edinburgh, the Queen's husband; and the 10-year-old son, prince of the King.

A larger party of the brigade of guards will lift the coffin from its catafalque to the grey-green gun carriage, called the Royal Derry will pull the carriage through the streets with the glimmering covers, both led across and the King's funeral of the Order of the Garter led on my.

Throughout the lying-in-state and the ceremonial, the coffin will be kept closed, as it traditionally at the funeral of kings.

WHEN A KING DIES

by The Duke of Windsor

THE MAN WHO HAS KNOWN what it means to take his father's place on the Throne tells, in his autobiography, of his emotions and duties when "The King is dead."

THE DUKE OF WINDSOR, who sailed alone for Britain yesterday, stood with the Duchess as he told U.S. journalists of his journey in the funeral "and to comfort her Majesty, my mother."

Christmas 1935, at Sandringham.

My father had grown thin and bent; we all shared a sense of foreboding that this might well be his last Christmas; so we tried to make it an especially happy one.

In the spacious white ballroom of the Big House, where we had all had such fun in my grandfather's time, a fourth generation had begun to assert itself.

Bertie's two children, Elizabeth, who was then nine, and her sister, Margaret Rose, romped around the tree.

His home

January 31, 1936: He died from Windsor Great Park, where he has been shooting with friends, to Sandringham, where his father is "not very well."

The air was clear, and as the sun shone down into the valley, a sudden impulse made me signal the pilot to make a wide circle round the estate.

Here was my father's home, a place he preferred to palace and where some boyhood he had known happiness in a drive experienced by few men and almost never by Kings.

The Big House, set off by formal lawns from the surrounding woods, seemed the embodiment of my father's life and philosophy—secure, unchanging, apart. It was impossible for me to believe that his life might be coming to an end.

It is a harrowing experience to watch someone die, let alone one's father, and especially when that father is a King. Death came to him five minutes before midnight. And while my mind was still trying to comprehend the profound event that had in that instant occurred, my mother did an unexpected thing.

She took my hand in hers and kissed it; before I could stop her my brother George, who was standing beside her, stepped forward and followed her example.

I know of course that this form of homage was now by custom my due. But like my father the action embarrassed me.

I could not bring myself to believe that two members of my own family, or indeed anyone else, should be expected to humble themselves before me in this way.

Nevertheless, these two spontaneous gestures served to remind me, however tactlessly, that I was now King.

State pomp

I HAD to arrange the funeral of my father, and I was a committee of the civil and military officials responsible for the ceremonial.

The funeral of a Sovereign necessarily requires a vast public show—a display of state pomp and circumstance that necessarily runs contrary to the bereaved family's desire for privacy and simplicity.

At the last moment I asked myself what was wrong in my watching myself being proclaimed King? So I hurried across Ambassador's Court and joined them in a room in St. James's.

The impulse was well rewarded, for the scene was picturesque and colourful, with many lookers and trumpeters in attendance in state dress.

As the tremendous words rolled out, the symmetrical, polished words of sovereignty and dominion, I was swept by conflicting emotions.

There was a flash of pride in becoming King—Emperor of the vast and liberal Commonwealth. I knew so well.

When I returned to Sandringham on Wednesday afternoon, the coffin rested before the altar—in the little church near Sandringham. As I stood there it came to my mind that my father would have preferred that his earthly remains be spared the huge state funeral and be buried in the peaceful churchyard at Sandringham. But Windsor claims the bodies of British Monarchs.

A pheasant

His father's coffin is placed on a gun-carriage and taken to Windsor Station, where a special train is ready to take the coffin to London. The King follows the carriage on foot.

The morning was bright and frosty; a biting cold wind blew off the North Sea. Just as we topped the last hill above the station the stillness of the morning was broken by a wild, familiar sound—the crow of a cock pheasant.

My brothers and I glanced up in time to see a solitary bird flying across the road directly overhead. In the symbolism of that felicitous incident our sadness momentarily disappeared.

The thought occurred to all of us that had my father been vouchsafed the choice of one last sight at Sandringham he would have chosen something like that: a pheasant travelling high and fast on the wind, the kind of shot he loved.

On the night before the funeral I was obliged by custom to give a state dinner and reception at Buckingham Palace for the distinguished mourners.

Such feasting and commingling with my father still so buried seemed to me unfitting and heartless. Yet there was no escaping the duty.

Our vigil

ALL the time my father lay in Westminster Hall, officers of the Household Troops, together with the Gentlemen-at-Arms and Yeomen of the Guard, maintained a continuous vigil around the coffin.

It occurred to me that here was a way in which my brothers and I might pay our respects to our dead father in a simple and wholly appropriate way.

Having earlier taken the General Officer Commanding the London District into our confidence, I wrote Harry George, and I changed into full-dress uniform and returned to Westminster, arriving there shortly after midnight.

Without the public being aware of our presence, we descended the staircase into the Hall and stationed ourselves around the railings between the officers already on duty. Even at 11 o'clock the first of people still lined past the coffin. But I doubt whether many recognized the King's four most august majesties in uniformed figures. But, over sounds reversed.

We stood there for 20 minutes in the dim candlelight and the great silence.

I felt close to my father and all that he had stood for. Then all that he had stood for rose to the glory heights above us, the great clock chimed the half-hour—the hovering reverberations obliterating momentarily the sound of receding shuffling feet.

After the funeral

So ended a harrowing and exhausting week. The funeral did, the captain and the King departed for a little while I had the uneasy sensation of being left alone on a vast stage, a stage that was the British Empire, to play a part not yet written.

W. J. A. REILLY, 1901-1902 leader of the Ontario branch of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, will speak on "The Future of the Trade Union Movement in Canada" at the C. N. Club, 110 St. James St., at 8 p. m. on Monday.

France Takes Third in Trade

Canada Replaced By Resurgence

OTTAWA, Feb. 5.—(AP)—The British Empire's trade with Canada has declined to its lowest point since 1913, according to figures released by the Canadian Department of Commerce today. The report states that in 1933 the value of goods imported from Canada by the British Empire was $1,040,000,000, a decrease of $100,000,000 over 1932. The figures are the lowest since 1913, when the value was $1,100,000,000. The report also shows that the United States has replaced Canada as the chief source of goods for the British Empire. In 1933, the value of goods imported from the United States was $1,200,000,000, a record for that country. The report also shows that the value of goods imported from all other countries was $800,000,000. The report is based on figures for the entire year of 1933. It is the first time since 1913 that the value of goods imported from the United States has exceeded that of the British Empire. The report also shows that the value of goods imported from Canada has declined by 10 percent since 1932. This is due to a resurgence of trade with the United States and other countries. The report also shows that the value of goods exported from the British Empire to Canada has increased by 10 percent since 1932. # THE QUEEN FLYING HOME

The King Will Lie in State Next Week in Westminster Hall

VALET FOUND HIM DEAD AT 7.15

Premier Broadcasts Tonight After Meeting Royal Party at Airport

FROM DAILY MAIL REPORTERS
SANDRINGHAM, Wednesday.

THE KING died, as he would have wished, at home. Yesterday he was in good spirits and apparently in mending health.

Last night he dined alone with the Queen and Princess Margaret. At 10.45 p.m. he retired to bed in the great room where his father, King George V., once slept.

Just before 7.15 a.m. his Majesty's under-valet, Mr. MacDonald, began to run the King's bath, then went with tea to wake his master. He drew back the curtains and then made the discovery that was to shock the world that the king was dead. Only on Sunday, when Princess Elizabeth visited Scotland, when Air Vice-Chiefs and their wives stood by the King's side, did he appear to be in any way unwell. The Princess's lack of sleep was due to the fact that she was heavy this year, and the Air Vice-Chiefs were concerned to see that she was comfortable. At 2.15 p.m. today a limousine on his way to Mombasa had Mr. Bell had been trying to get in touch with the Deputy Governor, Mr. C. H. Thorburn, in an effort to get some news of the King. Mr. Bell had been in a Press car. All the time he was driving he was looking for a sign of the King's motorcade in Mombasa. He had not seen it. He had not seen the King's motorcade. He had not seen the King's motorcade. He had not seen the King's motorcade.

By Daily Mail Reporters
QUEEN ELIZABETH, AND THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH WERE EARLY THIS MORNING FLYING HOME FOLLOWING THE TRAGICALLY SUDDEN DEATH OF KING GEORGE VI., ANNOUNCED FROM SANDRINGHAM YESTERDAY.

They are expected to reach London Airport at 4.30 p.m. today after flying under-valet, Mr. James MacDonald, took in tea at 7.15 a.m. On Tuesday the King had been out shooting and seemed in good health.

Plans are being made to bring the King from Sandringham on Sunday to Liverpool-street Station, London. There the coffin will be placed on a gun-carriage and will be taken through troop-lined city streets to Westminster Hall.

The King will lie in state there for a week. The

A CHRISTIAN KING

How threadbare is language, so interpret the concept of being. How meagre are words to convey the desolation, the emptiness at the heart which we all feel now that we have lost our King.

He is dead, and so suddenly that we still go numb about our business. Life, for a time, seems a dreariness and a misery, for our life no longer has a centre. The conversation of this nation is open and aching.

In the past 15 years there has been a great change in the way of life. The people are no longer happy. They are sad to be content. They are sad to be happy. They are sad to be happy. They are sad to be happy.

Solemn Splendor Marks Ceremonies

Hundreds Of Thousands Line 5-Mile Route As Procession Moved Through London; Empire Pulse-Beat Stops For Two Minutes

LONDON, Feb. 15 (CP)—Ten days of mourning for a beloved King reached a sorrowing climax Friday as George VI, perhaps the last of the Windsors, came home to his final resting place.

In a stirring tribute to the man who did not seek a kingdom yet added lustre to it, Britain rallied to two great state occasions—a five-mile march of grief from London and a simple funeral service within the walls of Windsor Castle, before home of kings.

It was a milestone in the British story, a vital moment marking the transition from father to daughter—from one respected reign to another already hopefully hailed as the reign of a new Elizabeth age.

THE DAY'S events, marked by solemnity in their handling and grandeur in their execution, were the most poignant since the death of Queen Victoria in 1861, when the King as a man 59 years old, and aged with a long reign, died of a heart attack at 72.30 in the great Chapel of St. George, Windsor.

As the British monarch's coffin was taken to the funeral home at St. James' Palace, a solemn procession of men in black robes and women in black dresses, some with their hands clasped in prayer, moved through the streets of London.

At the funeral home, the King's body was laid out in state. The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, announced the King's death to the world.

Elizabeth again received news of her husband's death at the office in the night.

In the morning, a "hush" fell over the city. The Queen, who had been in the country since the death of her husband, returned to London.

The King's body was taken to the funeral home at St. James' Palace. The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, announced the King's death to the world.

Anglicans, Roman Catholics Hold Commemorations As King Lauded For Lifetime Consecrated To Duty

From early morning until late afternoon Friday, Calgarians lauded their thoughts from work and play to the dead tribute to the monarch, who inspired the people of the British Commonwealth, through 44 years of peace and war.

As one citizen remarked, it was like a Sunday, with the streets closed and business almost at a standstill. At 2:30 on a cold sunny Sunday afternoon the citizens of the city gathered from the city centre to participate in the funeral service, which was held in the presence of a large number of people gathered for a civic memorial service.

Village Folk Of Sandringham Pay Respects To Their Squire

King's Body Placed In Estate Church

THIS IS A RADIOPHOTO AIRVIEW OF SANDRINGHAM, the royal country estate in England, showing the manor house (background) where the King died early Wednesday. The King's body now lies in the church on the estate (foreground) where it will remain until Monday. Then it will be taken by special train to London for its last lying-in-state at Westminster Hall.

SANDRINGHAM, England (AP)—Humble villagers filed through their hushed country church today to pay last homage to the man they called squire—King George VI.

Farmers, carpenters, woodmen and servants sorrowfully stopped before the candle-lit bier to look for the last time on the coffin of their sovereign and friend.

Inside the big mansion nearby, where the King was born and where he died, Queen Elizabeth II—proclaimed throughout the land Friday as the new ruler of the British realm—remained closeted in deep mourning with her mother and sister and others of the royal family.

The new Queen's flag flew high over Sandringham house. It was raised there Friday when finally she joined her bereaved family after performing the first heavy and solemn duties of her queenly station. Her father's standard, which had flown over the mansion until his quiet death in sleep Wednesday, now covers his naked coffin.

THE BODY of the fallen monarch lay in the little grey-stone 16th century church of St. Mary Magdalene 250 yards down a winding garden path over which it had been carried Friday night from the big residence.

A village policeman stood guard at the wrought iron gates near the chapel. Only the 300-odd villagers whom he could recognize as the King's men workers were admitted.

The new queen had asked that work at Sandringham go on today just as any other day. The men stayed at their jobs—tending the animals and gardens and other duties on the vast estate—except for the King's game keepers, who kept a silent watch over the coffin. IN THEIR GREEN, hooded jackets and dark knee breeches, the game keepers took two-hourly watches, four at a time around the royal casket.

Some of the game keepers had stood the same grim watch over the body of the late King's father, George V, when he died here. And some had played with the late King when he romped over the estate as a boy.

Inside the church, a carpet had been laid to hush the shuffle of feet past the King's coffin. A strong, warm sun sent shafts of multi-colored light through the stained glass windows. Four candles flickered at each corner of the bier. On the coffin was a silver plate engraved "Albert Frederick Arthur George Windsor, born 1895 died 1952."

ON THE COFFIN, too, lay three wreaths bearing the cards of his daughter, the new Queen; his widow, and his only other child, Princess Margaret.

The still air in the little church was fragrant from the wreaths of lilies of the valley, roses, carnations, hyacinths and apple blossoms.

The body of the King will lie in the church until Monday. Then it will be taken by special train to London for its last lying-in-state at Westminster Hall.

NO SERVICES will be held Sunday in the church.

The 25-year-old Queen came home at last to her dead father at dusk Friday after pledging faithful sovereignty and being proclaimed through the land. She had been driven 130 miles from London in her green Rolls Royce limousine.

Part of the time, her handsome young husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, was at the wheel, with the Queen beside him in a foot-

Queen Mother, Margaret Attend Church Service

SANDRINGHAM, England (Reuters)—Veiled in heavy mourning, widowed Queen Mother Elizabeth and her daughter, Princess Margaret, made their first appearance in public today since the death of the King.

Their heads bowed in grief, the two women drove through the main gates of Sandringham estate to attend a half-hour Holy Communion service at the Royal Church of St. Mary Magdalene, a few hundred yards away.

After the service, the car returned to the estate empty while the widowed Queen and Princess Margaret walked alone through the grounds of the estate to the sprawling brick house where the King's body lies.

Villagers of Sandringham went to work wearing black ties and some bands, out of respect for a man that was more than a reigning monarch to them. He was the local farmer, deeply loved and respected as an understanding landlord.

The villagers hoped that they would be able to pay their last respects in the little 16th century church of St. Mary's.

When the last King, George V, died here 15 years ago villagers in the area were allowed to see his body, which rested in the church for a few days before being taken to London.

THE NEW QUEEN'S birthday, April 21, may become a public holiday.

Her father's birthday, Dec. 14, was observed in Britain at a variable date in June with the famous ceremony of the Trooping the Colour in London.

In Canada it was observed as a public holiday.

The queen mother, who under an act of parliament will receive a life pension of £70,000 yearly, is expected to move into Clarence House when Queen Elizabeth and her husband move out to take up residence at Buckingham Palace.

Dockyard officials at Devonport ordered a stop to the refitting of the battleship Vanguard. The ship was being prepared to take the King on a spring cruise to South Africa.

THE WILL of King George VI will stay secret for all time. Royal wills are outside the jurisdiction of all British courts and local authorities. The King's last testament will not be published.

Requests will be made to the King's ministers, staff and servants, but they will be told to keep silent about them. Distribution of the remainder of his estate will remain a family secret.

The Russian embassy in Washington didn't get around to flying its flag at half-staff until hours after the other diplomatic missions there had lowered theirs. As late as 4:30 p.m. E.S.T. the Russians had taken no action. In fact no flag at all was flying over the embassy. After several inquiries to their reporters, the Russians reported at 1:15 a.m. that the hammer and sickle flag was at half-staff.

ARTILLERY guns of the First British Commonwealth Division fired 101 rounds across the sea to honor the Korean battlefield today in the "death of the monarch" salute to the King. The first shot was fired on the extreme right flank of the division's line. Then the firing moved across the front from gun to gun at one-minute intervals.

The 201-gun salute was followed 15 minutes later by a 21-gun salute in honor of Britain's new queen.

Word of the King's death reached the division headquarters Wednesday night. It was relayed by field telephone to all units, but it was this morning before the sudden news reached many of the men in their snow-crammed foxholes.

In front of the division command post, the flag of the United Nations, the Union Jack and the divisional standard hung side by side at half-staff. They will remain lowered until further notice, probably after the King's funeral.

Stores in London reported a rush for men to buy black ties today. One big West End department store said "men started buying their black ties Wednesday and there has been a steady sale ever since."

MALAY RULERS of the nine princely states in the Malayan federation ordered prayers said in all mosques for the King and young Queen Elizabeth II. The rulers designated the Sultan of Johore, senior Malay ruler in award of condolences to Queen Elizabeth.

The Hungarian foreign ministry has sent a note to the British legation expressing sympathy. Budapest newspapers published the news of the death in one sentence this morning.

Black and purple drapes were hung about the main doors of the parliament buildings today. They will remain until the day after the funeral.

W. A. MATHER, president of the C.P.R., on behalf of directors and personnel of the company, has telegraphed the federal government a message of sympathy in the death of the King. "I would ask you to convey to Her Majesty the Queen and members of the royal family our deepest sympathy in their bereavement," Mr. Mather wired.

President Donald Gordon of the C.N.R. on behalf of the company's employees, expressed sympathy and sorrow.

The queen mother will receive £70,000 a year. A 1937 act of Parliament provided that pension.

Australian Prime Minister Robert Menzies announced here Wednesday that he had received the following message from Queen Elizabeth:

"Owing to the sudden death of my father I have to return home immediately. I regret that for the present my Australian visit will have to be postponed."

Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi will personally proclaim a week of mourning by the Imperial Iranian court over the death of King George.

The Soviet press published briefly and without comment Wednesday the news of the King's death and the accession of young Queen Elizabeth. All papers carried the news.

The official daily court circular from Buckingham Palace gave just 11 words Wednesday night to the death of the King:

"The King passed away peacefully in his sleep early this morning."

PRIME MINISTER Winston Churchill sworn allegiance Wednesday to his sixth British monarch. His voice was almost inaudible among members of parliament taking the oath as subjects of the new Queen Elizabeth. Churchill has been in the service of all six monarchs in his lifetime. He was commissioned in Queen Victoria's army in 1865.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN Wednesday expressed "deepest sympathy" to the British people upon the death of the King. He said that the King played his part in world affairs "nobly" and with full understanding of his responsibilities.

U.S. State Secretary Dean Acheson and many members of Congress joined the president in lamenting the King's death and in wishing a long, successful reign to the new Queen Elizabeth II.

The U.S. house adjourned out of respect to the King after adopting a resolution asking the president to convey its sorrow in Great Britain.

The Queen Mother commends her daughter to the Nation

'SHE NEEDS YOUR LOVE'

A moving message from Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother was issued from Buckingham Palace last night. It thanked 'a multitude of people' for their sympathy with her and asked 'your protection and your love' for the new Queen 'in the great and lonely station to which she has been called.' The message reads:

"I WANT to send this message of thanks to a multitude of people—to you who, from all parts of the world, have been giving me your sympathy and affection throughout these dark days.

"I want you to know how your concern for me has upheld me in my sorrow, and how proud you have made me by your wonderful tributes to my dear husband, a great and noble King.

"No man had a deeper sense than he of duty and of service, and no man was more full of compassion for his fellow men.

"He loved you all, every one of you, most truly. That, you know, was what he always tried to tell you in his yearly message at Christmas; that was the pledge that he took at the sacred moment of his Coronation fifteen years ago. Now I am left alone, to do what I can to honour that pledge without him.

"Throughout our married life we have tried, the King and I, to fulfil with all our hearts and all our strength the great task of service that was laid upon us.

"My only wish now is that I may be allowed to continue the work we sought to do together.

"I commend to you our dear daughter; give her your loyalty and devotion; in the great and lonely station to which she has been called she will need your protection and your love.

"God bless you all; and may He in His wisdom guide us safely to our true destiny of peace and good will."

'NOW I AM LEFT ALONE'

NOTHING could be more beautiful and touching than the Queen Mother's message to the people thanking them for their sympathy, and asking their "protection and love" for our new Queen.

Pride there must be in the Queen Mother's heart that her child joins the great line of Britain's monarchs. But also, surely, some feeling, some pang, that her daughter is so young to occupy a station which, as her message says, is so "great and lonely."

She must, however, also feel most deeply and confidently that the British people and all the Commonwealth will not fail to give the young Queen both protection and love.

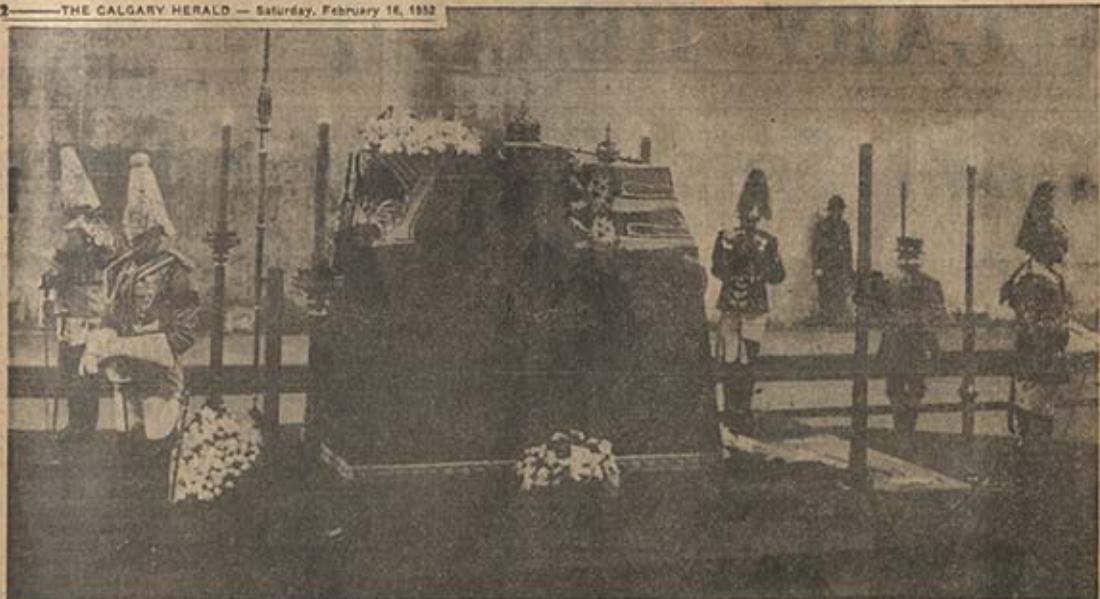

The whole nation will see to it that her wish is fulfilled.

Our life would be poorer if it were not.

2 A.M. BEFORE THE AMAZING MARCH OF 80,000 PEOPLE ENDS

These are some of the people who went to pay a last tribute to their King yesterday. Ordinary, everyday folk—and each with deep love and loyalty for the man who lies in State at Westminster Hall, just beyond the tower in the distance. Quietly without fuss, they joined the queue—which stretched a mile long from the doors of the Hall—and waited hours for the time when they could pass his coffin.

IN the darkness and bitter cold of the early hours of this morning, thousands of Londoners were still waiting to file past the body of their King in Westminster Hall.

It was an amazing demonstration of the loyalty and affection of a people to their beloved Monarch.

Since 8 a.m. yesterday the silent, sorrowing crowds had filed in their thousands past the purple-draped catafalque in the hushed, dimly-lit Hall. At 10 p.m., when the heavy oak doors were to have closed, 30,000 still waited outside. The queue stretched eleven days for over a mile—beyond Lambeth Bridge.

Change of Plan

But two hours earlier plans had been changed. It was announced that all those standing in the queue at 11 o'clock would be allowed into the Hall—no matter how long it took. After eleven, people waiting to join the queue were told that no more could be admitted until the morning.

The order came from the Minister of Works, Mr. David Eccles.

It was estimated that it would be at least 2 a.m. before the last of the waiting thousands had paid their homage.

A total of 80,000 people were expected to have paid their tribute to the King they loved in the first day of this sad, three-day pilgrimage.

Five Hours to Wait

The queue was taking five hours to get into the Hall—five hours of waiting, shuffling forward, and waiting again on one of the coldest nights of the winter.

Temperatures were expected to fall as low as 10 deg.

LILIES FROM TRUMAN—VIOLETS FROM MISS DEARIE

A BRILLIANT array of flowers from the British people, a line of lilies from Miss G. Dearie, a woman who lives in San Francisco, California, and a bouquet of violets from the King's mother, the Queen Mother, are among the tributes to the late King Paul of Greece. The King's mother, the Queen Mother, is the only woman to have been crowned Queen of Greece. She is the daughter of King George I of Greece and Queen Olga. She is the mother of King Paul and Queen Frederica. She is also the mother-in-law of King George VI of the United Kingdom and Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother. She is the grandmother of King Charles III of the United Kingdom and Queen Camilla. She is the great-grandmother of King William III of the Netherlands and Queen Máxima. She is the great-great-grandmother of King Willem-Alexander of the Netherlands and Queen Sophie. She is the great-great-great-grandmother of King Philippe of Belgium and Queen Mathilde. # THREE MEN WILL RING BIG BEN'S TOLL

Dr. Paulo Cunha, Portugal's Minister for Foreign Affairs and his country's representative at the King's funeral, arrives with his wife at London Airport.

Two Queens will drive behind coffin

THE Queen, the Queen Mother, Princess Margaret and the Princess Royal will drive in a carriage behind King George's coffin at the funeral procession through London tomorrow. The Sovereign's Standard will be carried in front of the carriage by a warrant officer of the Household Cavalry.

Immediately behind the carriage four Royal dukes will walk—Edinburgh, Gloucester, Windsor, and the King's nephew, the boy Duke of Kent.

It is not yet known what uniform will be worn by his dukes.

With the death of the King, the Duke of Windsor became senior Field-Marshal of the British Army. He is entitled to wear the uniform of his rank at any ceremony where uniform is worn.

Behind the Royal dukes will walk members of foreign royal families, expected to number thirty, and other representatives of governments both foreign and Commonwealth.

Handed to the Queen

At St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, where the King is to be buried, the King's Company Colour of the Grenadiers will be handed in the Queen, who will place it in the coffin.

These arrangements for the mile-long procession were announced yesterday. At the same time, it was announced that Queen Mary, who is eighty-four, will not attend the funeral.

It was stated at her home, Marlborough House, that she was quite well, but it was felt that she should not expose herself to the strain of attendance.

As already announced, the procession will leave Westminster Hall at 9.30 a.m. and reach Paddington at 12.10 p.m. The Royal train reaches Windsor Central Station at 1.10.

At 2 p.m. the King's body will enter St. George's Chapel—and the two-minute silence will begin.

The Kings and Princes arrive

HOUR by hour, Kings, Princes and Heads of State from every part of the world began arriving in London yesterday to attend the King's funeral. Yesterday's arrivals so far included King Gustav of Sweden and Queen Louise. They were met by the Duke of Edinburgh, who lined Queen Louise when she stepped from the plane. Later the Duke met King Paul of Greece at Victoria station. Prince Paul of Yugoslavia was received at London Airport by the Duchess of Kent. Others who flew in were Dr. Paulo Cunha, Portuguese Foreign Minister, and Prince Ali Reza Pahlavi, brother of the Shah of Persia, and President Celal Bayar of Turkey. Prince Albert of Belgium, representing King Baudouin, is due at Victoria today. Others arriving today include Queen Juliana and Prince Bernhard, King Frederick and Queen Ingrid of Denmark. President Auriol of France and the French Vice-Premier, M. Henri Queuille,

Boy Duke pleaded: May I go?

THE Duke of Kent, aged sixteen, one of the four Royal Dukes who will walk behind the Queen's carriage tomorrow, will be the youngest person in the procession. He was recently sent to a Swiss school because he suffers from sinus trouble, and some members of the Royal Family thought that the procession would be too much of an ordeal. But the Duke asked that he should be allowed to attend.

"DAILY MIRROR" REPORTER

IN a tower high above London, three workmen will be waiting tomorrow morning to sound a farewell knell as the King's cortege leaves Westminster Hall.

At 9.30 two of the men will begin tolling Big Ben fifty-six times—one chime a minute for every year of the King's life. They will toll the 13-ton bell by pulling a rope attached to the striking hammer. The third man in the bellry, 292 steps up, will stand by with a chronometer to ring exactly on each minute. The names of the men are being kept secret. But they are the same men who tolled the bell for King George V's funeral.

So that the chime will resemble a church bell, the striking hammer will be muffled.

The note of the bell is B—a flattened E because the bell was cracked by the heavy hammer that was first used to strike it.

The bell is 17 ft. 8 in. high and 3 ft. across its mouth.

DUKES MAY GO ON WATCH

By GEORGE MORTON SMITH

ONE of the first things to discuss on Windsor was expected to discuss on his arrival from America yesterday was a proposal that, with the Duke of Gloucester, the Duke of Edinburgh and one other, he should stand guard at the catafalque in Westminster Hall.

It was on the suggestion of the Duke of Windsor, then Edward VIII, that his brothers stood guard with him at the lying-in-state of his father, King George V.

The Duke, who is staying with Queen Mary at Marlborough House, was given straight to London after his arrival at Southampton docks.

When the Queen Mary got into port, the Duke asked reporters not to put questions to him. Instead he read a statement, similar to the one he made when the ship left the U.S.

'Youth and Courage'

The Duke, who said "this is indeed a sad arrival in my country", spoke of the Queen and said he was sure her father's well-known attributes would descend to her. He recalled:

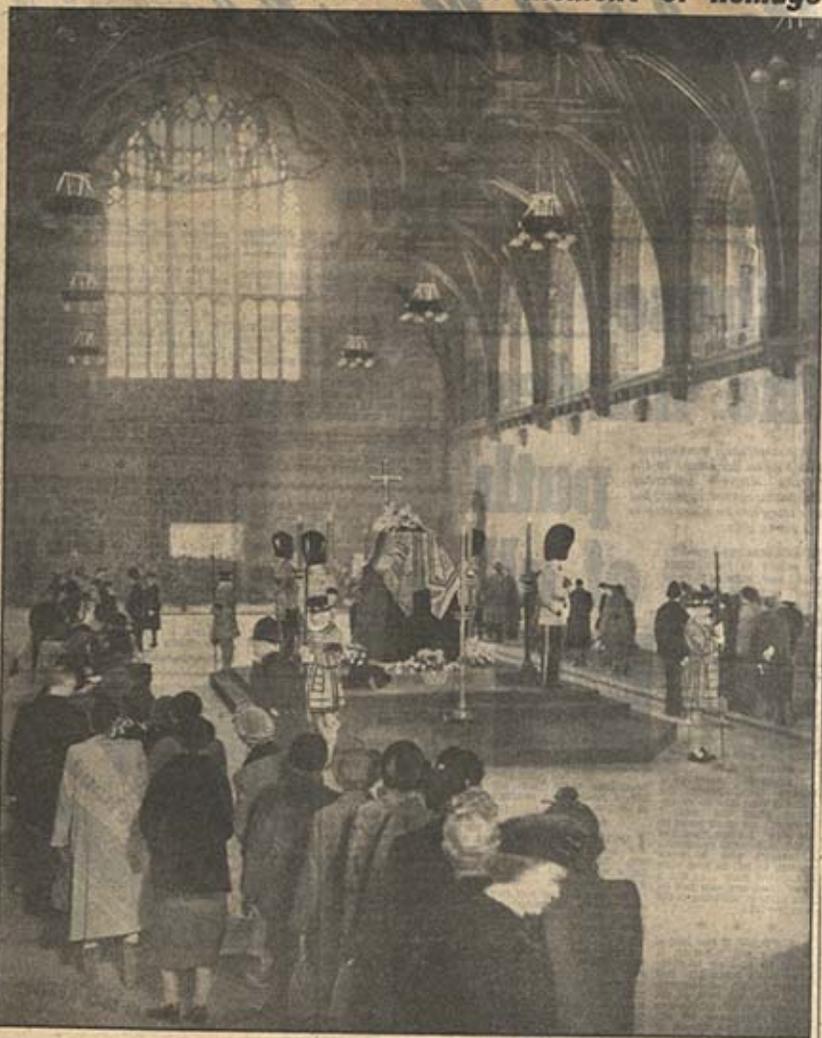

"As I saw again the white silhouette of Osborne House from the bridge of this great vessel as she steamed slowly up Spithead, my thoughts turned back to another Queen, my great-grandmother, Queen Victoria, who was even younger than our present Queen when she ruled—eighteen years of age to be exact—when her ruin came to the war, the Crown of the United Kingdom.

"Youth and courage are great assets in those perilous times in which Elizabeth the Second begins her reign.

And at the outset she has the help and support of her husband, Philip, and of her loyal and good wishes of all her people."

They waited five hours for this moment of homage

BBC ROUND-WORLD TRIBUTE

By CLIFFORD DAVIS

THE British Commonwealth will pay tribute to His Late Majesty at 9.15 tonight in a special round-the-world radio link-up called "The Commonwealth Mourns His King."

The B.B.C. are repeating Mr. Churchill's broadcast of last Thursday and on-the-spot broadcasts will follow from Canada, Hong Kong, Bermuda, Accra, Nairobi, Malia, India, South Africa, Singapore, Australia, New Zealand and other parts of the Commonwealth.

Then the microphones will switch back to Britain. There will be contributions from Miss Zola Williams, a retired London schoolteacher; Fred Noyan, a Gosport fisherman; Frank Sawyer, of the West Country; Councillor Pearl Hyde, of Coventry; Johnny Curry, Manchester United football club captain; and Fred Gould, a London taxi-driver.

The hundred-strong Penryn Male Choir from the Rhonda Valley are taking part, with masonic pipes and muffled drums from Edinburgh.

The third part of the programme will take listeners back to the Commonwealth to hear tributes from people who met the King during his visits to the Dominion.

Maori natives will sing a farewell hymn from New Zealand and Group Captain Roder Maize will speak from South Africa of the 1947 Royal tour there.

Three members of the Services will contribute to the programme. The Army spokesman will be Private Spokkusa, the Korea V.C.

Another speaker will be Mrs. Roosevelt, who will broadcast from the U.N. Assembly in Paris.

The programme, arranged in three days, will be linked by actor Leo Gern

QUEEN MARY AND DUKE OF WINDSOR STAND WITH PUBLIC AT BIER

And three miles still to go

They are queuing
to get in here

These people are at the three-mile mark in yesterday afternoon's queue waiting to enter Westminster Hall. In front of them, the line stretched along Albert Embankment, over Vauxhall Bridge, along Millbank to Victoria Tower Gardens. There, it doubled back on itself several times in quarter-mile loops before going along the last stretch of Millbank and into the Hall. The huge multitude, standing for hours in a bitter wind to pay homage to the King, was one of the most amazing sights ever seen in London.

ANOTHER 100,000 PAY TRIBUTE

WHEN the queue waiting to enter Westminster Hall was cut off at midnight last night it was expected that it would be 3 a.m. before the last of the long line of waiting mourners would pass through the Hall. People leaving the Hall at midnight had found the queue six hours before. It was estimated that by the time the last of the mourners had filed through the Hall this morning more than 100,000 people had paid their tribute yesterday to King George VI.

In all, in the two days, about 120,000 people had passed the bier. Hundreds of children were among the thousands still waiting to enter Westminster Hall early today. The queue, about eight deep, stretched along Millbank, along the Richmond, the Tate Gallery and over Vauxhall Bridge to the south side of the river. All yesterday, mourners were passing through the Hall at the rate of about 6,000 an hour. During the evening police vans broadcast to the crowds in Parliament-square directions on how to find the "end" of the queue. Police on motor-cycles patrolled up and down on both sides of the Thames at Westminster, all controlling the vast queue. It was two and a half miles of silent sorrow—and one of the most amazing sights in London's long history. Taxis ferried mourners to the starting point of their long, chilly walk. In the great, hushed line, many stood with heads bowed in sorrow.

After waiting the long hours, Mrs. E. Higgins, 76, of Burroughall-road, Beckenham, collapsed as she was about to enter the Hall last night. She was taken to hospital weeping. "I wish I could have lasted until the end. I wish I had the strength. I have called my King," she said. Mrs. Mary Davies, 72, of Lambeth-road, S.E., was in the queue holding a small bunch of anemones. "I feel this is the least I can do," she said. "You see the King came to see me when I was bombed out in Lambeth. I shall never forget." As the queue moved on policemen and police-women standing in groups a few yards apart, spoke in voices barely above a whisper as they regulated the crowds. The only sound was an occasional pathetic cry from a child upset by the silence. Most of the women in the queue were black. Many men wore black hats.

AS 30,000 hushed people waited in a two-and-a-half mile queue outside Westminster Hall last night, the Duke of Windsor and his mother Queen Mary came to pay their homage at the Lying-in-State.

With them came the Princess Royal. For fourteen minutes, mother, brother and sister of the dead King were beside his coffin.

The Duke dropped to one knee as he entered and left the Hall. For several minutes Queen Mary and her daughter stood motionless with bowed heads beside the purple draped catafalque.

For Queen Mary it was her second visit to the bier. She was there first on Monday, when the Lying-in-State began.

Last night she went again, like any other mother, with her eldest son to comfort her in her grief over the loss of another.

And, as always in times of distress, her daughter the Princess Royal stood at her side.

In being a mother, she never forgot to be a Queen. In the midst of her own quiet journey to that purple catafalque, she turned to the officer in charge of police who had quietly halted the queue.

The Queue Filed On...

She asked that their progress should not be hindered. And so, as this intimate family group continued their vigil, the flow of sorrowing citizens began again and filed silently before them and the catafalque.

While they were standing there, the four Coldstream Guards officers on duty were relieved. Then the Gentlemen-at-Arms were also changed.

The occasion stirred memories of the time sixteen years ago when the Duke and his three brothers stood guard on this same spot at the bier of their father, King George V.

On leaving the Hall, Queen Mary drove home again to the old-fashioned Marlborough House, where the gilded clocks steadily tick in an unchanging still Victorian quiet.

But this time she had her eldest son to sit beside her during the evening, and to talk with her.

The Duke had arrived from America during the afternoon. He had tea with the Queen and Queen Mother at Buckingham Palace.

All-night crowd in funeral vigil

IN the sleet and rain and bitter cold, people who had queued for hours to pay their tribute at the Lying-in-State, last night took up places along the route of the funeral procession of King George VI this morning.

In the early hours thousands had gathered in the streets. Many were sitting on the edge of the pavements. With camp stools and umbrellas, they prepared for the wait through the long hours of the day. At 10.15 a.m. after leaving Westminster Hall, they were headed with blankets, vacuum bottles, and other necessities. One of them, Mrs. Wain-Continued on page 11.

The Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Princess Margaret, from the funeral procession.

THE QUEEN JOINS HER PEOPLE AT FATHER'S BIER

FOR eleven minutes last night Queen Elizabeth and Princess Margaret stood silently in Westminster Hall looking at their father's coffin while his people slowly filed past to pay their homage.

As she left the Queen showed signs of distress but as they drove back to Clarence House.

Nearly four hours later—at 11.35 p.m.—the Queen Mother drove to the Hall and stayed there for twenty-four minutes. With her hand on the coffin she said: "I shall be with you always." At the end of the ceremony she was immediately faced by the boy and girl who had been with her father at the end of his life.

Princess Margaret had sobbed that evening but she had not wept today. She was not, by tradition, to be seen at the funeral. She stood discreetly unobtrusively behind the shades cast by the other ladies of the royal household in the Duke of Edinburgh.

As they entered, through already opening huge double doors, the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh stood there, three stood unmoving while the crowd passed by. Queen Mother Princess Margaret was wearing a veil, and that made their faces appear unusually pale in contrast to their dark hair.
