"God's Providence House."

In a quaint old English City,
On the banks of the River Dee,
Is a queer old wooden building
Of a style we rarely see,
Some hundreds of years it has stood there
In the narrow and stony street,
Carved over its oaken doorway
With a legend strange and sweet.

The line has been so perfect,
It is read at a single glance,
"God's Providence",-so it sayeth,
"Is mine Inheritance",
And if one should ask its meaning,
He would hear this story told
Of a dreadful plague in the city,
Which darkened its days of old.

It ravaged the homes of thousands,
And the people wildly fled,
Calling on God for mercy,
While mourning their many dead,
In the street where this house is standing,
No other escaped the blow
And thanks for such special favour,
The Legend is meant to show.

Each house and heart in the Kingdom
Inherits God's love and care,
Yet seldom it shows such record,
As is carved on the crossbeam there,
Stand strong, old house, in thy glory,
Bearing witness as years advance,
That Providence, caring and loving,
Is man's blessed inheritance.
